Are they clean-cut. The numbers graduating from Paris, Montpellier and Prague was palpably smaller than from Reims, but it may be that they were more highly motivated, better educated and, perhaps, more influential in shaping medical practice in the eighteenth century when, with the Protestant ascendancy firmly rooted, their number appreciated sharply. A most original and peculiar spirit pervades these old productions, which, by their freshness and simplicity, almost seem to place us in the regions of fairy-land. Cathy Cavender.
